SUMMARY & SOURCES

The 1989-1990 period saw distinct patterns of communal violence against Hindu communities, primarily triggered by tensions surrounding the Ayodhya dispute in India. This resulted in an extensive nationwide pogrom, especially in late 1990. Aggregate data reveals a devastating scope of targeted incidents – severe physical violence, extensive destruction of temples, forced displacement, and economic marginalization. The enduring vulnerability of this period and the state's failure to intervene underscore the historical and critical need for sustained minority protection measures in Bangladesh.
